"THE TRAINED NURSE AND HOSPITAL REVIEW" is a magazine of practical nursing and progress, and of hospital information.

✕

It numbers among its contributors the cleverest writers in the hospital and nursing world.

✕

It is always on the lookout for new writers, who, because of special training or experience, are peculiarly competent to write for its columns.

✕

The key men and women in its field take it, read it, prize it, recommend it.

✕

It gives brief, breezy accounts of the activities of every important nursing and hospital organization in its territory.

✕

It gives the news—boiled down—of all important events or gatherings in its own field.

✕

It gives an honest, unbiased opinion of every worth-while book in its realm.

✕

It supplies in every number short, crisp articles on practical methods of nursing under different conditions.

It keeps its readers posted regarding progress in social welfare work and hospital social service.

✕

No magazine of its kind in the world offers so many practical articles relating to training school management.

✕

"The Hospital Review" gives, every month, pertinent notes on hospital progress, with special emphasis on practical methods.

✕

It has for years advocated the grading, licensing and registration of all who nurse the sick for hire.

✕

It follows no fads nor phantasms, but stands for practical and real methods of improvement where such are needed.

✕

Practical utility and fair play have been its dominant notes throughout its nearly a quarter of a century's experience in the American hospital and nursing field.

✕

If you are not now a subscriber, it invites you to become one and co-operate in its work. If you are a subscriber, will you pass this leaflet along to some one who is not.
